"Crazy Hair Day", another spirit day sponsored by the JFK Student Council, affords Mr. Fisher the opportunity to "let his hair down" - or to wear a dead animal on his head - who could tell?

Although Miss Nealon needed to dress professionally to maintain her demeanor in the Guidance Department, she coordinated her outfit with a special friend with whom she traveled on Costume Day.

JFK Involvement...

What would a "Day of the Dead" celebration be without Mrs. Siwinski and Mrs. Trevena appropriately dressed in black, with skull earrings, necklaces, and pins. Spanish language students join in leading this observance of the Latin holiday.

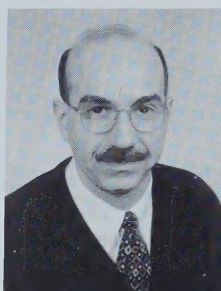

Mrs. LaFrancis' curriculum involves not only math, science, social studies and English, but also "life skills" such as cleaning and cooking. Here she demonstrates bringing a vegetable to a boil to her students.

JFK Readers...

Donna Letourneau and other members of Miss Jerome's class browse among the "magic eye" and "goosebump" books at the Great American Book Fair, sponsored by the Reading Department and held each year during American Education Week in the Library.

The Book Fair, which this year expanded to three days, allows all Reading and Foreign Language students to purchase books to enhance their reading for pleasure. Some parents also "snuck in" on Open House night to purchase presents.

What a collection of winners! Sarah, Brian, Mike, Cassie, Annisa, and Amy have some of the most creative costumes and are singled out during the morning parade around the hub of the school to represent their teams in the competition.

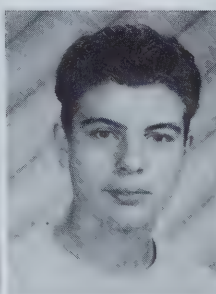

The scary and the beautiful, the ugly and the gorgeous, and those just "clowning around", all joined in on the first Spirit Day of the year sponsored by the Student Council - a Costume Day for which winners were chosen and prizes awarded.
